

SCHAC'S NEW BOARD MEMBERS

Commissioner Harold Jean Brown of Georgetown joined the board of the Commission in May, 2014. A graduate of King's Business College in Charlotte, NC, she has an associate's degree in Executive Secretarial Science. She retired as an administrative assistant.

*Commissioner
Harold Jean Brown*

Commissioner Brown, who grew up in the 60's, was aware of the Commission and how it started. In that Brown is an advocate for human and civil rights, one of her goals is to see that people are treated fairly and equally. She wants the Commission to be recognized and respected in the public and private sectors, and she feels that more funding from the governor's office would help.

Commissioner Brown wants to see more Community Relations Councils (CRCs) established. She believes they could serve as a clearinghouse to distribute information about housing, employment, and recreational activities. Brown wants the public to understand that the CRCs are not just about discrimination. Further, she wants the Commission to be better known.

She sees the Commission's greatest strength as the ability to solve complaints on the state rather than the federal level.

Commissioner Brown is the mother of two daughters, and she has three grandchildren. She is a member of Mt. Sinai Missionary Baptist Church. Brown is a former school board member and an avid reader.

*Commissioner
Ashley Case*

Commissioner Ashley Case, from Laurens, graduated from Wofford with a major in government. She graduated from USC School of Law in 2^{1/2} years. Case began her law career at Butler Means Evins & Browne; then she worked in the Solicitor's office in Spartanburg for 10 years. She presently works for the Greenville Solicitor's Office.

Commissioner Case said that many people are unaware of what the Commission does. As a Commissioner, when she encounters people who are unaware of what we do, she informs them of our mission.

Commissioner Case acknowledges that discrimination exists, even if people discriminating are unaware of their offense. Case believes that everyone should be treated fairly.

Commissioner Case has two children; one is a Wofford grad, and the other is a Wofford student. She is a member of Trinity United Methodist Church in Laurens where she is active with the youth ministry and the church choir.

SCHAC to Participate in January 2015 MLK Event

For the past eight (8) years, the Carolina African American Heritage Foundation has sponsored an annual MLK event in partnership with the Myrtle Beach Human Rights Commission and other community organizations and leaders. This year, SCHAC will participate in the annual MLK event in January 2015. SCHAC will participate in the 3-day event by assisting with coordination and planning. Other community relations councils (CRCs) throughout the state will assist. SCHAC is also assisting with plans to sponsor a deliberative dialogue forum that will address quality of life issues including the “Cradle to Prison Pipeline.”

The Myrtle Beach Human Rights Commission was established by the City of Myrtle Beach in 1990, and chartered by SCHAC in 1991. Funding in the past has come from the City of Myrtle Beach, the Myrtle Beach Area Chamber of Commerce and others.

Chiemeka Egwu

Chiemeka Egwu is an intern from Allen University, where she is a senior who will be graduating in December 2014. She was born in Washington, DC and moved to Nigeria when she was 6 months old; she moved to Charleston when she was 3. After high school she attended South Carolina State University, but decided to join the Navy. After a medical discharge, she went to Allen for 2 years and majored in business. Chiemeka decided that she wanted to see the world, so she became a flight attendant for 4 ½ years. She became ill, recovered and later went back to Allen.

Chiemeka took a non-profit class last semester, in which she found out about the Commission; the more she wanted to get the word out about SCHAC.

She built SCHAC's Facebook and Twitter sites, and she wants to build LinkedIn, do PR, and help with outreach.

Chiemeka said that many students do not know about SCHAC, so she has helped to spread the word about the agency. Now, students at Allen know that they can come to SCHAC for help. She said that most people she encounters do not realize that SCHAC provides free services.

She recognizes that SCHAC is a state agency that helps throughout the state, but it's connected to a federal agency, so if people contact the federal agency, they can come to SCHAC. The employees at SCHAC know their jobs, but if they need help, they are not afraid to go and ask for help.

Social media and networking are Chiemeka's passions. She talks about SCHAC to her professors and her classmates and feels that her outspokenness is a plus.

Chiemeka's name means "God has done well," and she has lived up to that name at SCHAC.

Chiemeka said that she would love to work for SCHAC after she graduates.

Sharique Ray-Young is a senior at Allen University from Newark, New Jersey, majoring in business management. He moved to South Carolina in the 8th grade, and he likes to play basketball.

Sharique wanted to explore this agency to see if he wanted an office job when he completes school or if he wanted to pursue his dream as an entrepreneur. He has decided upon graduation to be an entrepreneur, owning his own welding business.

While at SCHAC, he is learning time management, more patience with the consumer, and the ability to work with others.

He said that many students at Allen are unaware of the agency, and he would like to see more awareness of SCHAC at Allen.

He believes that his social media skills have been an asset.

Sharique added that working at SCHAC has been a great experience, and he has adapted well.
